FEMALE MIMICS, the first large-format magazine that catered to the transgender community, represents an important stage in the development of that community. By breaking with the digest format, FM offered a far more compelling vision of cross dressing, focusing on professional impersonators and the venues where they were featured. "Certainly," noted Bob Davis and Carol Kleinmaier in AEGIS 2/1, "the editors wanted straight and closeted people to feel as safe reading the magazine as they were at these shows. The audience had to feel secure in their heterosexuality and protected from the 'freaks and queers' on the other side of the footlights or in the photos. Thus, in these early issues, there is no sex mentioned, not even implicitly." FM also covered drag balls - like the club performances, easy to photograph - and amateur impersonators, but had little information on transsexuals. The overall effect of emphasizing photos over text is, as Davis and Kleinmaier note, to "make the ball queens creatures of fantasy, not real people," a trend that still continues in current magazines. Nonetheless, FM represented an important step in the development of positive transgender identification

Cover story, "Are homosexuals security risks?" focuses on the case of William Martin and Bernon Mitchell, NSA cryptologists who defected to Moscow and were assumed to be a gay couple. Author Don Slater (editor of the journal) accepts at face value the rumors of homosexuality and worries that antigay crusaders will seize on the defection as a reason to keep gay men out of government service, expressing bewilderment that the couple would have gone to the USSR: "Communism and homosexuality are contradictory and inimical.... Let it be the heterosexual who may be easily pressured in his wish to survive and conform." Whether the pair were actually gay has remained a puzzle; Martin married in Moscow but was divorced shortly thereafter. Mitchell appears to have been bisexual.

There were some discrepancies in the numbering of issues, a problem common with even the largest publishers. Issue number one of this volume is dated December 1967 while issue 4 is dated March-April 1968 and the issues for July & August are both numbered 8. S.I.R. was an extremely important homophile organization in the 1960s-70s and "Vector" was the main gay magazine for the Bay Area during those years. The magazine began life as a newsletter in 1964, merely several folded and or stapled sheets with news and calendars. The late Sixties found the magazine concentrating more on local and national news of interest to gay men. The final years saw the magazine turn more to a standard gay men's magazine with photos of young men from around the Bay Area.
